the first of the century, and the population of the town was not more than a few hundred. In 1630, when the first of the Puritan emigration came to Boston, there were only about a dozen families in the town. In 1634, when the second wave of immigration came, there were only about a dozen families in the town. In 1636, when the third wave of immigration came, there were only about a dozen families in the town. In 1638, when the fourth wave of immigration came, there were only about a dozen families in the town. In 1640, when the fifth wave of immigration came, there were only about a dozen families in the town.

In the year 1630, seventy years after its settlement, Boston contained about seven thousand inhabitants—an average increase of one hundred a year. In 1633, Roxbury contained about seven hundred, with perhaps one hundred dwellings. In 1635 there were probably not more than a thousand people in the whole town of Roxbury, occupying about ten thousand acres of the best soil ever cultivated. Land had, however, increased in value, by the introduction of such a trade, and it was only a portion of the town that was cultivated. The town of Roxbury, which had eight acres of land, was sold in 1635 for £100, or about a shilling an acre. The same was sold in 1715 for £100, or about a shilling an acre. No wonder his descendants were disappointed and angry to find that the land was not as good as they had heard.

It may be interesting to consider, for a moment, the sparseness of the population at that early period. In 1630, only fifty years before Francis Young's time was known in Roxbury, there was a very small population in Boston, Weymouth, and Charlestown, who four years later sold the entire peninsula for £300, reserving only six acres for his share. His name, and only his name, were Thomas Wilford and his wife of Charlestown, and Samuel Mayhew of Nantucket Island (East Boston). At each of the following places, Hull, Quincy, and Weymouth, there were a few families, making a total, in all, of these towns now so densely populated, of probably not more than fifty inhabitants.

In the year 1700, seventy years after its settlement, Boston contained about seven thousand inhabitants—an average increase of one hundred a year. In 1633, Roxbury contained about seven hundred, with perhaps one hundred dwellings. In 1635 there were probably not more than a thousand people in the whole town of Roxbury, occupying about ten thousand acres of the best soil ever cultivated. Land had, however, increased in value, by the introduction of such a trade, and it was only a portion of the town that was cultivated. The town of Roxbury, which had eight acres of land, was sold in 1635 for £100, or about a shilling an acre. The same was sold in 1715 for £100, or about a shilling an acre. No wonder his descendants were disappointed and angry to find that the land was not as good as they had heard.

The commoner tribes were very simple in their manner of living. Their breakfasts and suppers consisted chiefly of boiled corn, in some form of porridge and bread and milk. Their dinner consisted of Indian pudding, broiled fish, corn with cabbage, and turnips. Potatoes were not used as food until a few years ago. Their plates and dishes were mostly of wood and pewter.

1. FRANK, 1st YOUNGMAN, born ? ? , married WILLIAM ANNA (FISHER) HARRIS, Dec. 2, 1685. She was born in Dedham, Mass., in 1661. He died at Roxbury, July 26, 1712. Their children, all born in Roxbury, were:—

1. James (b. Jan. 1, 1713; d. young).

4. EVERETT (Jacobus (Everett), born Nov. 1, 1711) was married by Dr. Cotton Mather, at Boston, Jan. 8, 1731, to MERRY JONES, daughter of John Jones and Susanna Jones. He was a felt-maker, and carried on his business in Boston, at the corner of which is now Hanover and Blackstone Streets. He lived in a rich house on Fish Street, with rear on Court Square. He left Boston in 1738, and must have died previous to 1734, as his widow, Mercy, administered upon his estate in that year.

Their children, all born in Boston, were:—

- i. James (b. Jan. 1, 1713; d. young).
- ii. Mersey (b. Nov. 27, 1716; m. Jean Synnues, March 13, 1740).
- iii. Susan (b. Oct. 13, 1718; m. Howard Gresham, 5. 20, 1740).
- iv. Cornelius (b. Aug. 10, 1721; d. unmarried).
- v. Samuel (b. Feb. 1, 1722; m. Jean Crafts, May 22, 1742).
- vi. Nicholas (b. Oct. 15, 1723; m. Mary Wright).
- vii. Thomas (b. June 5, 1725; m. 1st, Mary Bondage, Aug. 22, 1740; m. 2d, Melitode Snelledge, Dec. 7, 1757; m. 3d, Susan Wilby, Aug. 26, 1758. He was a merchant, and had no children).
- viii. Joseph (b. Feb. 15, 1726; m. Widow Martha (Marks) Phipps, Jan. 1, 1741; d. young).
- ix. Jamies (b. April 7, 1728; d. young).

The widow of Thomas Jones, Mercy (Jones) Mather, was married to John Mather, Aug. 26, 1740, but he died again a widow in 1740, when she sold her share of the estate on Mill Street, together with one of the pieces of land on the lot for $125. This was the first notice that the son of Ebenezer died without wife, except.

He enlisted on July, 1865 for six months, and did his duty at West Point and the Northern Frontier. The town of Hollis voted to pay Thomas T. Angell and S.
Blood, each nine bushels of wheat, £210.18.70 in honor of the government wages of these two men in doing his duty. This was a great advance, as the currency had become depreciated. It was difficult to find recruits who would do it on trust.

When the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war

When the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war

With their ships our heroes did stand,
 Blowing with fury every gun,
 Rounding about with many a deadly blast
 Till the flag and all the crew were slain.

What a day, what a day, what a day,
 When the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war

And when in some of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war

Led by the prowess of this valiant man,
 Who, going forward, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war

The first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
 took place, the first of the great battles of the war
